This study describes the development and implementation of a patient deterioration pathway in community hospitals. Over a 10-month period, two hospitals in South Africa implemented the Acute Deterioration Pathway (ADP). Documentation of the pathway was completed and documentation tools developed. Simulated clinical deterioration scenarios were used in a pre-post pilot study to assess the effectiveness of the pathway. Knowledge surveys were completed by all stakeholders involved in the pathway and qualitative exit interviews were conducted with staff and patients. The success of the pathway is confirmed. The pathway improved the documentation of the occurrence of all identified triggers and actions of all the ADPs. A large proportion of the patients were able to recover quickly from the simulated clinical deterioration scenarios and show no impact on clinical management. Two hundred and twenty-five patients were treated with the ADP over the 10-month period. These patients experienced an average of 12 clinical deterioration events, a reduction of 14 clinical deterioration events on the hospital. The pathway has Upper airway dimensions in orthognathic surgery. The upper airways of six patients were studied by radiographic cephalometry before and after orthognathic surgery. There were two groups: In one group the orthognathic surgery included upper jaw surgery only, the second group included maxillary and mandibular surgery, the upper jaw surgery being treated in the same way as for the mandibular surgery. Pre- and post-operative dimensions showed that the post-operative dimension was greatly influenced by the orthognathic surgery. Q: API not responding properly from inside a server-side (not jquery) click event I have an API inside a click event that will open a div after being called. I'm using a library called backbone for this front-end framework (using backbone.js). As soon as I make a call from the back-end to the API it shows up, but when I try and make a call from within a server-side function it does not work. Here is the code for the back-end call.

window.addEventListener('load', function () {
  var list = new ApplicationListView(); list.render();

Here is the code for the code in the server-side function.

function insertClickHandler() { $.ajax({ type: 'POST',

url: "", data: { "key": "Couch", "date": "2016-11-21" }, dataType: 'json', success: function (response) { console.log(response); } }); } And here is the code for the front-end. window.addEventListener('load', function
() { var list = new ApplicationListView(); list.render();
}); Why would it work from the back-end, but not
